RECOVER

Tuesday, September 20

The first day will focus on communities engaged in various stages of wildfire rebuilding and will be dedicated to networking, information exchange and recovery strategies. Keynotes, panel discussions and workshop sessions will address specific topics related to community organizing for the long term recovery, addressing community needs, indigenous land and practices, and mental health.

REBUILD

Wednesday, September 21

The second day will feature representatives from government programs and national organizations to connect with wildfire communities to build relationships, enhance networks, and expand knowledge. Keynotes and panels will focus on federal programs, home hardening, financial considerations for rebuilding and philanthropy's role in the recovery.

REIMAGINE

Thursday, September 22

The final day will focus on technology, innovation and building capacity for a more resilient future, learning about actions that help reduce the destructive impact of future wildfires. In keynotes and panels, innovative leaders will share new approaches, best practices, lessons learned, and highlight the role of innovation and technology in the space of wildfire resiliency, response and recovery.

The Wildfire Resilience Network

In this era of megafires, we need strong leaders who are ready to collaborate, innovate and share knowledge for recovery and rebuilding. Together, as a Wildfire Resilience Network, we can meet this challenge and reimagine a more resilient way of life across the American West.
